Further details

An area of low pressure is expected to bring a spell of strong winds and heavy rain to southern England and south Wales on Saturday. Gusts of 55-60 mph are likely inland with gusts of 70 mph around coasts and over hills - the strongest gusts most likely across coastal southwest England where isolated gusts of up to 80 mph are possible in very exposed locations during the morning. There is some uncertainty in the northern extent of strong winds.

Winds are expected to slowly ease from the west during the afternoon.

Medium likelihood of low impacts
